How to Prevent Altitude Sickness While Trekking ABC in Minimal Duration?

Altitude sickness is a common problem trekkers face even in the minimal duration. Generally, Acute mountain sickness is faced as you get above 2500m. A short trek to Annapurna Base Camp reaches up to 4130m, so there is still a chance of Altitude sickness while trekking in ABC minimal duration. Headache, Insomnia, Nausea, Lack of coordination, Loss of appetite, and Swelling of hands and feet are some significant symptoms of altitude sickness. If you experience such symptoms, immediately call your guide for help, and our guides will help you overcome such issues.

Here are some of the preventive measures and tips that reduce the chance of altitude sickness you may get during short trekking in Annapurna Base Camp:

- Ascent slowly: While trekking the Annapurna base camp short trek, consider ascending slowly. Ascending slowly helps your body adapt to the changing temperature and acclimatize to the increasing altitudes.
- Carry medicine: While preparing for trekking in the Annapurna Base Camp, consider carrying medicine for altitude-related sickness. Diamox (Acetazolamide) is a commonly used medicine for preventing altitude sickness.
- Stay Hydrated: It is necessary to stay hydrated during the short trek to Annapurna Base Camp. Trekking daily for about 4-5 hours leads to tiredness and dehydration, so staying hydrated can help you maintain your body condition. Trekkers are advised to consume 5 liters of water daily while trekking on ABC.
- Avoid Alcohol, smoking, and Caffeine: Consumption of alcohol, smoking, and Caffeine leads to dehydration. Consumption of such items can damage respiration and other metabolic activities of the body. So, avoid alcohol, smoking, and even Caffeine as much as you can.
- Proper Nutrition: Throughout the short Annapurna Base Camp trekking, you must consume a properly balanced diet with the right amount of carbohydrates. Avoid consuming oily and heavy meals. However, you don't need to be worried about the meals, as Boundless Adventure provides three meals throughout the trekking journey. The tea houses provide the meals, where you get local and organic food.
- Travel with a guide: Guides are the companions of your trekking journey who do multiple tasks for you. A well-experienced guide is trained in handling emergency cases and can recognize your altitude sickness symptoms. So, traveling with an experienced guide can greatly help you prevent the risk of acute mountain sickness.

Risk of High Altitude Sickness

The risk of high altitude sickness, also called acute mountain sickness, increases with an increase in altitude and the speed of ascent. Getting to the destination is beautiful, but the altitude sickness is dangerous. Although altitude sickness is dangerous, it can be prevented and treated. Still, if the condition gets extreme, it can turn into a Severe critical condition. To minimize the risk of high altitude sickness, you need to know about the risk factors of altitude sickness:

- Rapid Ascent: When you ascend rapidly on the short trek to Annapurna without letting your body acclimatize, your body will be unable to change temperature. The rapid ascent also doesn't allow the body to adapt to the decreasing oxygen level at higher elevations, so not allowing your body to acclimate causes a high altitude risk.
- Dehydration: Dehydration doesn't let the body perform metabolic activities, causing respiratory problems. Not properly hydrated can cause headaches, nausea, dizziness, and fatigue, a symptom of acute mountain sickness. Another risk of high altitude sickness is caused due to dehydration in the body.
- Consumption of alcohol: During the Annapurna base short trek, one should not consume alcohol. Additionally, consumption of cigarettes and caffeine can also lead to the risk of high altitude sickness.
- Lack of acclimatization: Proper acclimatization is important while trekking at a higher altitude. Pepper rest plays a vital role in reducing the risk of high-altitude sickness. When your body is in good condition, it will be able to adjust to the changes in temperature and decrease the level of oxygen. Despite that, a lack of acclimatization can cause a high risk of altitude sickness.
